

Men

In Ancient Athens, there were three categories of men:

- 1 Citizens
- 2 Metics
- 3 Slaves

Roles and Responsibilities:

Citizens:

Citizens were born Athenian and could vote well they could also own property and they are allowed to participate in government and had more value.

Metics:

The Metics were foreign born they couldn't vote and couldn't own property but could influence government but they were still friends with the citizens.

Slaves:

Slaves were captured in war. They were considered property. The value depended on his strength, education and skills.

Women

Women also were categorized three ways:

- 1 Athenian Women
- 2 Metics
- 3 Slaves

Roles and Responsibilities:

Athenian Women:

Athenian Women are Athenian born and they could own property but they could not vote but they could influence the men to make changes and things.

Metics: the metics that are females they were foreign born so they couldn't own property they couldn't vote and weren't allowed to participate in election.

Slaves:

The female slaves were no different than the men they could still be bought and sold and were still considered property.

Children

Children had different roles depending on gender and family income.

Rich Boys:

Most rich boys went to school and got taught and ready have a nice life.

Poor Boys:

Poor boys got taught military training and they could help out the family business and work.

Girls:

They female children had to stay home and they learned how to do chores and help around the house.

Slaves

Slaves had a different role than any one else.

The slaves had to do tons of work and chores even they could be sold and bought and they were also just considered property.

